RESPONSIBILITY OF INSTRUCTORS IN OUR SCHOOLS

PROFESSOR STABLER ADDRESSES TEACHERS ON THE DUTIES CONFRONTING THEM

GOOD BRAIN WORK CANNOT BE EXPECTED UNLESS PHYSICAL CONDITION IS GOOD

Strongly Advocates "Stretching Periods"—Teachers Should Court Acquaintance of Parents and Pupils Should Know Teachers.

While a little late the following address made by A. K. Stabler, supervising principal of the city schools, at the opening of the term, is so full of meat and timely suggestion as to be given wide publicity.

We are entering upon another year of school work. To some of you it is your first year in the Globe schools, and I desire to acquaint you with our policy and some of the conditions which we shall have to meet.

In the first place, it is a fundamental principle of our policy that the schools shall be conducted that they shall contribute to the very best interests of the children committed to our care. We are not to spare ourselves any labor that will further this end. A heavy draft will be made upon your patience, perseverance, energy and scholarship.

Therefore, I would urge you to pay special heed to your own physical condition for upon this depends much. Indeed, it is the basis of successful work. No brain can work to the best advantage in a half-sick, tired or sleepy body.

The amount of patience that you are able to exert, the alertness of the perceptions, the kindly sympathy, the justice of discipline—all depend upon physical vigor and health to a large degree.

It is our purpose during the year to give you the largest possible freedom in the management of your own rooms and in your methods of teaching that is consistent with successful administration.

We want you to feel at liberty to exercise personal judgment and to let your own individuality, for we count it a great feature of our public school system that pupils come under the influence of a wide variety of personality, temperaments, etc., among their teachers during their school life.

In addition to the facts which you are expected to teach by the aid of text books and the mental power which you are expected to develop, you should give careful attention to the physical comfort and welfare of your pupils, such ventilation, adjustment of children to desks and to children, admission of light, cleanliness and the formation of correct habits of sitting, standing, walking, playing and studying.

Calisthenic exercise or what you may more familiarly call "stretching periods," during school hours, are of great importance. In the primary grades particularly exercises in free calisthenics and vocal and breathing exercise should be given at least twice a day and for a period of not less than five minutes.

During these exercises the windows should be thrown wide open that plenty of fresh air may be had. Guard carefully—aye, religiously—the children's health. Allow no desire to see them progress mentally lead you to imperil their health. A man with good health has almost everything else within reach, but a man without health is shut out from almost everything else.

Furthermore, it is expected that due consideration shall be given to the development in the minds of the pupils of high ideals of conduct, industry, beauty, right living, politeness, respect for the aged, infirm and unfortunate, humane treatment of animals and respect for law, government and justice. To the accomplishment of this end, the opening exercises of each day be devoted to teaching manners, morals and humane nature. Also take occasion as opportunity arises in your reading lessons to point out the elements of character building to be found therein and illustrated therefrom. Successful and useful lives are built upon a few fundamental principles.

There are some that are of more value than what we commonly call education, and that teacher who is an educator in the highest sense of the word improves every opportunity to impress these principles.

The familiarizing of yourself with the home life and environment of your pupils will greatly aid you in directing their work and in the administration of just discipline. It is well to know the parents of the children who are in your charge. It will prevent many misunderstandings and secure co-operation. The co-operation of parents is not a thing to be despised. The attitude of parents may make your work easy or hard, successful or a comparative failure.

Keep parents informed in regard to the progress of their children, their tardiness, absence, misdeeds, etc. In the administration of any severe discipline it is well to confer with parents in regard to the same.

At the same time that we urge you to become acquainted with the parents and home life of your pupils, we are not forgetful that parents owe it to you and to the successful education of their children that they shall meet you at least half way. A duty devolves upon them to search you out, to learn your motives and points of view; on the whole, to get your side of the question.

Now, I come to speak of what will be one of the most exasperating and difficult things with which you will have to contend, namely, truancy, tardiness and absences. Those of you who have been in other schools, I doubt not, will be appalled by the frequency of and apparent unconcern about tardiness and absences. The enormity of this matter will become apparent by comparison with other schools in other parts of the country.

For instance, take Colorado Springs. In that city the school enrollment is about 6,000. Their per cent of tardiness on the enrollment is seven. Globe's is thirty-seven, or more than five times as great.

It is our hope that every endeavor will be put forth to correct this condition. It is unfair to the pupils who attend regularly and who come on time that others should be absent or late without good reasons. Recourse to a few figures will show how absences and tardiness rob the faithful of their just rights. Suppose that you have fifty pupils in your room and that all are in their places on time but two. These two come in after the day's work has been begun. They interrupt the work for two minutes each, or four minutes for both. Four minutes each for fifty pupils is two hundred minutes, or more than three hours of time lost to the room. And in the case of an absence, the pupil falls behind, say, just one lesson in each study. He returns the next day and it becomes necessary for the teacher to leave the rest of the room to themselves and coach him for thirty minutes. That one absence means a loss to the rest of the room of twenty-five hours. I repeat that it is unfair to those pupils who attend regularly and punctually that others should be habitually late or absent without sufficient cause.

The school laws of this territory require that you shall require an excuse from each pupil who is absent or tardy. You will adhere strictly to this law, not so much for your own information as that parents may be fully aware of all absences and tardinesses of their children. I have found from experience that most parents appreciate a notification of their child's absence as a means of preventing truancy, and that they cordially co-operate with the teacher to that end.

You will find yourselves much hampered in your work by reason of the crowded condition of the schools. In the central building we have but 328 seats, all told, and we have 640 children to occupy them. Judging by the reports of last year, there will be not fewer than 700 pupils to be cared for in the central building by the first of October. Last year new pupils entered the schools at the rate of a good-sized roomful every month for six months after school opened. The same condition is likely to prevail this year.

As soon as the new buildings are completed we shall have room; meanwhile, you will have to do the best you can.

We regret the necessity that is upon us of putting some of the grades upon half-day sessions. I know that such an arrangement is always unsatisfactory to teachers, but it is also unsatisfactory to the patrons of the school. Under existing circumstances I do not see how we can do otherwise with the facilities which we have on hand.

In closing this address I wish to extend a hearty welcome to the new teachers, words of praise to the old, and to express the hope that we may, one and all, work harmoniously together, always remembering that these young lives are committed to our keeping and that it is our supreme business to educate them in mind, body and character, both by precept and example.

HE GOT HIS 23 FOR FLYING FLAG OF AMERICA

ANOTHER STORY OF ANTON TROJANOVICH'S EXPERIENCES IN AUSTRIA

THOUGHT HE WAS A REVOLUTIONIST AND GAVE HIM TWO DAYS TO SKIP

Inhabitants Wanted Him to Remain and Official as Lord Mayor of the Town of His Birthplace—A Barbecue for the City's Population.

The New York Times of September 19 has the following revised story of Anton Trojanovich's experiences in the land of his birth:

"Acute patriotism" might very properly have been the diagnosis by the police of Sustepan, Austria, of the case of Anton Trojanovich, lumber dealer and mine owner of Globe, Ariz., when they gave him just two days in which to leave that land of his birth. He got back to American soil yesterday on the White Star liner Oceanic accompanied by his brother Louis.

In spite of their name the Trojanovich brothers are American citizens and intensely loyal. They came to this country years ago, and, going west, "grew up with the country," and likewise grew into riches.

Anton, the hero of the adventure here related, is six feet high and correspondingly broad. When he laughs, as he frequently does, his voice seems to rumble from a great distance, and as he laughed over his visit home the cabin fixtures seemed to tremble. On August 3 he and his brother sailed from New York on the American liner St. Paul for a visit to their mother, whom they had not seen in fifteen years.

It is probable that their visit will be remembered in Sustepan as long as any of the 800 inhabitants or their children live. They had the time of their lives with their brothers and the townfolk, and it was to emphasize the good time that Anton had the American flag put up over his mother's house. This brought down upon themselves the wrath of the authorities.

Whole Town Invited to Feast

On the day of their arrival Anton and Louis went about renewing old acquaintances and making others, and by 6 o'clock that evening they had invited a host of friends to share in their hospitality. The feast was to be held the next afternoon, and before that time arrived every man, woman and child in the place was talking of the "rich cousins" who had come home from America and with untold millions to spend.

"I was struck with the fact that while we had prospered in America," said Anton, "there was not much prosperity in the town, and so we started out to give everybody a good time, and we did." Here the rumbling laugh rolled out and set things vibrating. "I found one old friend, a woman we knew since we were children and who is now 90 years old. She was in need, and it did me good to repay the kindnesses of twenty years ago. That old woman now lives in a cottage and has an assured income while she lives."

After playing Santa Claus to most of their old friends the brothers determined to get up a barbecue, American style, and see that every soul in the town had a chance to partake of it. Before doing this they gave a children's party, at which every youngster had his or her fill of roast pig, honey and other "goodies." Anton confided to his friends that he was sorry he could not get a supply of ice cream, but although he could not, he told the children all about America and ice cream.

The barbecue was held on Sunday, September 1. A great field about a quarter of a mile from his mother's home, was the site of the feast.

When the feast was at its height Anton thought it would be a great thing to raise the American flag on a staff on his mother's cottage. He hired an Italian to put up a pole near the one from which was flying the flag of Austria.

Old Glory Up in Austria

These preparations completed, Anton gathered the village folk about him and amid much hurrahing the Stars and Stripes were run up. The ceremony over, the merry villagers went back to discuss the roast ox and pig. Anton, in the excess of his joy, gave gold pieces to all the little girls and boys.

It was like a page out of the fairy book to them, and, indeed, even the grown-ups got enthusiastic over Anton and his brother. They wanted him to remain and run for mayor. "We'll elect you," they shouted again and again, but Anton heard the call of Arizona and refused the honor.

On the following day Louis, his brother being away, was led away by a constable and taken before a magistrate in a neighboring town. The authorities wanted to know all about the flag incident. Some suspected that the big brothers were the advance guard of revolutionists. Anton, on his return, went to his brother's rescue. He took full responsibility for raising the flag and explained that they were American citizens.

The magistrate gravely shook his head, but said that on condition that they would leave the country he would overlook the demonstration.

They were grown on the experimental farm which is now under the direction of Professor Wilson. The bunch is suspended from the ceiling where all may see and examine it and it is a beauty, the fruit being practically ripened, though it has to mature a little before it will be choice for eating. This exhibition bunch, however, is to look at, and not to eat, and a big sign imparts this information. Accompanying the exhibit is a statement of the following facts: The tree is of the variety Seewah, or Siwah, and is one of nine trees that were imported in the early nineties. This tree has borne as much as 400 pounds of fruit in a single season. This year it fruited too heavily, having seven bunches that weigh from thirty-five to forty pounds each. The trees blossomed about April 21 and the fruit is now nearly ripe. The ripe fruit from this tree last year was all sold as a novelty at 50 cents a pound. Assuming each of the bunches to weigh thirty-five pounds, the tree this year has produced 240 pounds. F. J. Barr has also furnished the board with a sample lot of fine quinces grown on his place at Twelfth street and California avenue.—Phoenix Republican.

MEXICAN WAS ROBBED AS HE SLEPT IN CABIN

Two of His Countrymen Arrested and Held to the Grand Jury for Further Investigation

Jesus Pedraz and Lorenz Lopez, Mexicans, were arrested yesterday on complaint of Antonio Gamari, charged with larceny from the person. They were held to the grand jury in the sum of $500 each.

Gamari claims that while he was sleeping in a cabin in the northern part of the city the accused entered his room and took from the trousers of his pockets, which he had on, a handkerchief containing $36, three ten-dollar bills and the balance in silver. He identified one of the bills, which was taken from Pedraz when arrested, by a peculiar mark on it. Pedraz says that he got the bill from another Mexican in exchange for a horse. Two witnesses testified that they saw Pedraz and Lorenz coming from Gamari's cabin about the time he claims the theft was committed. The accused came to Globe about a week ago from Cananea.

HAD A KICK COMING

Three Thousand Mile Rate, $15.44; 217 Mile Rate, $14.44—Merchant's Experience

The Douglas Dispatch says: "F. V. Moreno, the well known merchant, yesterday received a shipment of 860 pounds of shoes from Boston, Mass., a distance of three thousand miles to El Paso. The freight charge upon this bill of goods from that point to El Paso was $15.44. The distance from El Paso to Douglas is 217 miles, and the freight charge on the 860 pounds to here was $14.44.

"If this is not argument enough that we should have another railroad to Douglas I don't know what is," said Mr. Moreno to a Douglas Dispatch reporter. "A proposition like this is discouraging and seems absolutely out of reason. If the people of Douglas can't get their freight from El Paso any less than the El Paso people can get their goods from Boston, it is about time for somebody to get busy. It is no wonder that the people of Douglas are continually clamoring for another railroad."
